Students at Wake Forest University have a new way to relieve the stress of academia. Wake's main quad, Hearn plaza, now has tables, chairs, games, and fitness equipment for students to take advantage of, including two ping pong tables. The changes are a hit with students.

"It's nice to see these kinds of opportunities available. As a student you come to school and work hard academically, it's nice to see these opportunities for students to just relax and think about themselves," said student Kory Riemensberger.

The changes are just phase one of the project, later this month an outdoor classroom and an outdoor piano will be placed on the quad.
